MAXIMISE YOUR INVESTMENTS WITH A COACHING AUDIT

WHO HAS A HOLD OF YOUR COACHING AND MENTORING PURSE STRINGS?

In many organisations, large and small, coaching – especially external coaching – and mentoring have grown exponentially over the last 5 years or so. And for good reason, study after study has confirmed their power in making learning opportunities count, building engagement and nurturing diverse talent.

Useful references: Coaching and Mentoring (4th edition) Chapter 2 – What The Research Says, Dr David Wilkinson Nübold, A. (2021). Evidence-Based Workplace Coaching–Are We There Yet?

It's clear, though, that much of that growth has been reactive or opportunistic. That doesn't make it 'wrong' but often makes it difficult for strategic talent leaders to see whether their investment in coaching and mentoring is fit for purpose, maximising benefits with the right mix of initiatives for their organisation and making the most of the resources they have in line with strategy and priorities. This is a real missed opportunity at a time when every drop of investment needs to count. It might also mean that there is little transparency over coaching and mentoring strategy and standards – which makes it hard for leaders to be sure that there isn't bias at work in who has access to the investment or that the coaching and mentoring offered is safe, effective and ethical.

When clients come to us to explore how we can help them get a real handle on their coaching and mentoring investment, it's usually because there is something that makes it difficult for them to grapple with. Sometimes there's a structural issue – there simply isn't anyone in the system who has overall responsibility for or oversight of Coaching and Mentoring for the organisation. Sometimes it's cultural – leaders want to 'own' their own investment in coaching and resist 'interference' from Talent or L&D functions. Or it could be part of a more general absence of strategic linkage between talent or L&D investment and strategic purpose and goals.

Whatever the challenges, building a coaching and mentoring strategy, policies and resources that deliver against your organisation's purpose and priorities is one of the most powerful contributions to organisational agility and adaptability that a strategic HR, OD or talent leader can make. It's like increasing your talent bandwidth; change and adaptation flow faster and allow much more to be done by more people simultaneously.

USE THIS CHECKLIST TO SEE HOW FOCUSED YOUR COACHING AND MENTORING STRATEGY IS.

		No	Somewhat	Yes
1.	We have a clear understanding of the changes in behaviour, impact and culture that would deliver greater success for our organisation.	0	0	0
2.	It's clear what the purpose of coaching and mentoring is/are in terms of the changes in behaviour, impact and culture of our people.	0	0	0
3.	It's clear what the focus and goals of individual coaching contracts or programmes are and how those align with the purpose of coaching and mentoring at an organisational level.	0	0	0
4.	We can easily see how much we are investing in coaching and mentoring across the organisation, on who and why.	0	0	0
5.	We have data on the performance of coaching and mentoring investment in making the changes in behaviour, impact and culture of our people that we seek.	0	0	0
6.	We have transparency in terms of who gets access to coaching and mentoring, both internal and external, and why.	0	0	0
7.	We understand whether any groups are disadvantaged in terms of access, and whether disadvantaged or under-represented groups are receiving the coaching and mentoring support that meets their needs.	0	0	0
8.	We have clear coaching and mentoring standards and processes - consistent with professional and ethical practice - to which all coaches and mentors, internal and external, adhere.	0	0	0
N				- Josef

DID YOU ANSWER:

NEARLY ALL NOS

The good news is that if you are spending on coaching and mentoring in your organisation, you have a real opportunity to make that investment more effective. If you're not yet investing, you have a clean sheet to start a really effective strategy. Where should you start? Perhaps by reading Coaching and Mentoring (4th edition) by Parsloe and Leedham, especially Chapters 9, 10 and 11.

MOSTLY SOMEWHAT

It seems like you've got a good start in some areas – are there parts of your organisation that are ahead of others? How can you spread their best practice if so? Or do you have a good policy that is patchily implemented? What's causing that resistance? What's the cost to the organisation?

MOSTLY YES

Impressive! It sounds like you have really invested in getting coaching and mentoring lined up with organisational strategy. It should be paying dividends! Do you have the measures in place to show that benefit? And how can you make sure that coaching and mentoring remains well designed as the needs and strategy, and leadership, of the organisation change? You might want to read Chapter 16 of Coaching and Mentoring (4th edition) by Parsloe and Leedham as a thought starter.

WE HAVE PARTNERED WITH CLIENTS TO:

- Build coaching policy and processes that supported a new talent strategy for an international energy company.
- Train several cohorts of internal coaches, for a FTSE100 manufacturing and engineering company. The programme gave the coaches a strong grounding in the fundamentals of coaching, tailored to the context of the company culture and the ways in which leaders there needed to grow and develop.
- Provide ongoing supervision to internal coaching groups, which includes group supervision, 1:1 conversations as needed, and continuous professional development. This ensures the internal coaches maintain good standards of coaching, that they work safely and that the business continues to benefit from its investment in creating a coaching cohort.

A MIX OF NO AND SOMEWHAT?

You probably don't need this quiz to tell you that there is a lot of room for improvement – what would make the most difference for your organisation, right now? Who would benefit from that? How can you engage with them to start making a tangible difference?

A MIX OF SOMEWHAT AND YES

Congratulations – a lot of really thoughtful work has gone into building your strategy already. But there are some areas that could undermine your good work. What makes those areas 'tricky'? How could you address them? What would be the payback if you did?

AN EVEN MIX OF ALL THREE

A bit of a mixed picture! What can you do to build on the strengths that you have? Are there some leaders in your organisation that are coaching and mentoring champions that you could engage to turn your ambers green? And what's the cause of those reds? Which of them are mission critical and must be addressed? What's the cost of not doing so?

Wherever you are in your journey, whatever the challenges, contact Diane Newell diane.newell@theocm.co.uk to start a conversation and find out more.

ENQUIRY@THEOCM.CO.UK